

Dear Senator,

How often it is said, our children are our future. If they are underfed, they tend to have more health problems, tend to develop physically, emotionally and mentally below their natural potential. And so become less productive and happy adults. Consequently they are more apt to cost society far more in the long run in terms of medical costs, criminal justice resources and loss of their undeveloped natural aptitudes.

Everyone deserves the basic needs of life. Raising the minimum wage is crucial to this end.

Sincerely,
Kathy Campbell
